Month in Cash: We can't get too mad at the Fed

October 1, 2013

We along with many others were as much befuddled as we were disappointed when Fed policymakers decided to put off tapering in September. We had expected a minimal pullback in the central bank's $85 billion in monthly purchases—enough to likely nudge up rates along the cash-yield curve as supply got reintroduced into the marketplace and the market began to price in the prospect for higher rates down the road. The Fed had been telegraphing tapering for much of the summer and the economic data—including that which was laid out by the policy-setting Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) itself in its post-meeting statement and projections—seemed to justify such a move. Perhaps politics (concerns over how the next act in the ongoing Washington debt-ceiling/fiscal drama will play out) and succession issues (Chairman Ben Bernanke is set to step down in January and the jockeying for his post—historically a muted affair—has been rather public) got in the way.

Whatever the reason, the lack of action by the Fed definitely has put a bit more downward pressure on short rates and repos in particular. The good news, however, is that even as it put off pulling back, the Fed went forward with its test of overnight reverse repos, which it plans to use to manage the central bank's exit from the extraordinary monetary accommodation of the past five years. While the program won't get started in full until tapering is done—and it now looks like that may not be completed until the latter stages of 2014—the availability of the overnight repos at rates set by the Fed have helped to establish a floor, nudging them up from still very low levels. This test, under which we've been able to purchase around $500 million daily and significantly more than that on some days, is set to run through January. So what the Fed didn't give with one hand, it did give with the other. At the least, the two forces—no tapering but reverse overnight repos—are offsetting each other and helping prevent rates from slipping lower.

Still, the reality is the Fed's inaction means short-term rates are going to stay lower for a little longer. The lack of movement at the September 17-18 FOMC meeting should serve to lengthen the time frame on Phase 1, Phase 2 and Phase 3 of the unwind process. Phase 1 is the stage in which the Fed starts to stop and eventually ends quantitative easing by paring the $85 billion in monthly Treasury and agency mortgage-backed security purchases—the so-called tapering phase. Many thought that would start this month. Phase 2 represents the portion in which the Fed launches its reverse overnight repo program in earnest to help shed the more than $3 trillion added to its balance sheet through QE and other extraordinary measures since the global financial crisis's onset. This program can't get fully underway until Phase 1 is done. Phase 3 represents actual tightening itself, i.e., increases in the target funds rate. It doesn't look like that will happen until late 2014–early 2015 at the earliest.

It's not clear what may happen when a new chairman comes in, but it's worth noting the presumed front-runner, now that the more hawkish Lawrence Summers has pulled his name from consideration, is Janet Yellen, who firmly is aligned with the Fed's more dovish faction. While

Definition of Weighted Average Maturity (1) & (2)

*(1) "WAM Days" is the mean average of the periods of time remaining until the securities held in TexPool (a) are scheduled to be repaid, (b) would be repaid upon a demand by TexPool, or (c) are scheduled to have their interest rate readjusted to reflect current market rates. Securities with adjustable rates payable upon demand are treated as maturing on the earlier of the two dates set forth in (b) and (c) if their scheduled maturity is 397 days or less; and the later of the two dates set forth in (b) and (c) if their scheduled maturity is more than 397 days. The mean is weighted based on the percentage of the amortized cost of the portfolio invested in each period.

*(2) "WAM Days" is calculated in the same manner as the described in footnote 1, but is based solely on the periods of time remaining until the securities held in TexPool (a) are scheduled to be repaid or (b) would be repaid upon a demand by TexPool, without reference to when interest rates of securities within TexPool are scheduled to be readjusted.

Definition of Average Monthly Yield (3)

*(3) This current yield for TexPool Prime for each date may reflect a waiver of some portion or all of each of the management fees.
